To remove detected files, users must purchase the full version. Note, however, that system cleaners distributed using the bundling method are often fake. In most cases, users visit fake error-displaying websites inadvertently - they are redirected to them by unwanted applications. Fake errors falsely claim that the system is infected to trick users into downloading tools that will fix non-existent errors.

This is a new variant of another questionable app called Advanced Mac Cleaner. Its appearance suggests that Mac Cleanup Pro is legitimate and useful, however, it often infiltrates systems without permission, since developers promote it using a deceptive marketing method called bundling. Prevent Cleaner From Being Ed On Corporate Computer License For Combo. It is also proliferated using fake error messages delivered by malicious websites. Therefore, we recommend that you consider uninstalling this application. Be aware that bundling is often used to proliferate several unwanted applications at once. Therefore, as well as uninstalling Mac Cleanup Pro, you should remove other dubious applications (especially if you experience the aforementioned ads and redirects). Therefore, pay attention when browsing the internet and downloading/installing software.

They deliver false scan results just to trick users into purchasing so-called full versions (to resolve issues that do not exist). In most cases, bundling is used to distribute adware and browser hijackers. These apps deliver intrusive advertisements, cause unwanted redirects, and gather sensitive information. The main reasons for computer infections are poor knowledge and careless behavior. Developers are not honest enough to adequately disclose installation of unwanted apps and hide them within Custom/Advanced settings (or other sections) of the download/installation processes. These programs have just one purpose: to generate revenue for the developers. Bundling is essentially stealth installation of third party applications with regular software/apps.

For these reasons, Mac Cleanup Pro is categorized as a potentially unwanted application (PUA). In fact, all potentially unwanted applications are very similar. By offering useful features, apps such as Mac Cleanup Pro attempt to give the impression of legitimacy and trick users to install.
